

Nathan Fatola

Service Delivery Manager

I work at Atos as a Service Delivery Manager for University College London Hospital (UCLH).

It's a semi-technical role with loads of opportunities that occur as a direct correlation to the effort you put in. My degree hasn't helped in the traditional sense but the ability to tell a story and engage people has been extremely helpful.

Post 16 Education AS Level Biology A Levels: Photography, Economics, Maths	Higher Education BA (Hons) in Politics with Economics
--	--

Why did you choose Politics?

Business studies was one of my favourite GCSEs and I knew I wanted to study something in that field for my A levels. I took Economics A level and it was around that time where the conversation about Britain's future in the EU began to take over everything else. I had a pretty passionate teacher who stressed the importance of voting for a party that aligned with our views.

After my first time voting, I became more interested in voting structures and how they differ between countries; which naturally led me to study a blend of economics and politics.

