

LOUGHBOROUGH Loughborough University and its predecessor colleges.

The present university originated from the Loughborough Technical Institute established in 1909. It was also previously known as Loughborough Technical College (1918-21), Loughborough College (1921-52), and Loughborough College of Technology (1952-66). It was designated a College of Advanced Technology in 1957 and granted university status in 1966 as Loughborough University of Technology. It has been known as Loughborough University since 1996.

Loughborough College was divided into four separate institutions in 1952: Loughborough College of Technology (see above); Loughborough Training College (known from 1952); Loughborough Technical College (known from 1918); and Loughborough Technical Institute (known from 1909).

LOUGHBOROUGH UNIVERSITY ARCHIVES
Pilkington Library
Loughborough University
Leicestershire LE11 3TU UK
Tel: +44(0)1509 222357 (Library) 222359 (Archives)

The Archivist has the primary responsibility for Archives collection development.

- Archive materials are normally acquired in the following ways:
- Transfer of the formal records of university boards and committees, selected administrative records, and papers of academic and service departments as appropriate.
- Donation of materials, whether voluntarily offered to, or actively solicited by the University Archives. It is Archives policy to encourage donations of material in keeping with the scope of the University collection.
- Deposit on loan. Donations are preferred to deposits on loan but loans may be accepted subject to the conditions of accession listed below.
- Purchase. Purchases may be made only in exceptional circumstances and if funding permits.

Conditions of accession:

- Donations accepted become the exclusive and absolute property of L58UIK(i)2.ssoperty of